

Tom has been a postdoctoral research associate in Professor Ghevaert's group at the University of Cambridge for the past five years. He previously completed his PhD at the University of Reading investigating platelet and megakaryocyte responses to pathogen and damage-related molecular patterns. Currently, his research focusses on determining the epigenetic differences that promote megakaryocyte development from stem cells, and interpreting the role of platelets following adenoviral vector-based vaccination